Working Group on Children and Armed Conflict

Conclusions on children and armed conflict in the Sudan

1. At its 63rd meeting, on 18 April 2017, the Working Group on Children and Armed Conflict examined the fifth report of the Secretary-General on children and armed conflict in the Sudan (S/2017/191), covering the period from 1 March 2011 to 31 December 2016, which was introduced by a representative of the Office of the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for Children and Armed Conflict. The Permanent Representative of the Sudan to the United Nations also addressed the Working Group. His statement is set out in the annex to the present conclusions.
2. The members of the Working Group welcomed the report of the Secretary-General, submitted in accordance with Security Council resolutions 1612 (2005), 1882 (2009), 1998 (2011), 2068 (2012), 2143 (2014) and 2225 (2015), and took note of the analysis and recommendations contained therein.
3. The members of the Working Group welcomed the steps taken by the Government of the Sudan to strengthen the protection of children affected by armed conflict, in particular through the strengthening of the national legal framework and the signing of an action plan for the protection of children from violations, in March 2016, and encouraged the Government to continue those efforts and to expedite the implementation of the action plan. The members of the Working Group also acknowledged progress in the dialogue with armed groups, including the signing of action plans and other commitments pertaining to the situation of children affected by armed conflict in the Sudan. The members strongly condemned all violations and abuses committed against children in armed conflict in the Sudan, in particular killing and maiming and rape and other forms of sexual violence.
4. At its 64th meeting, on 2 May, the Working Group was briefed via videoconference by the Co-Chairs of the Sudan country task force on monitoring and reporting on the situation of children and armed conflict in the Sudan. During the discussions, members of the Working Group expressed their appreciation for the work of the task force.
5. Further to the meeting, and subject to and consistent with applicable international law and relevant Security Council resolutions, including resolutions 1612 (2005), 1882 (2009), 1998 (2011), 2068 (2012), 2143 (2014) and 2225 (2015), the Working Group agreed to the direct action set out below.

Statement by the Permanent Representative of the Sudan to the United Nations on the report of the Secretary-General on children and armed conflict in the Sudan (S/2017/191), made at the sixty-third formal meeting of the Working Group on Children and Armed Conflict

At the outset, my country's delegation would like to thank the Security Council for convening this important meeting to discuss the report of the Secretary-General on children and armed conflict in the Sudan (S/2017/191) of 6 March 2017, which covers the period from 2011 to 2016. My delegation also reaffirms its commitment to promoting and protecting children's rights, especially children in conflict areas.

As mentioned above, this report covers a lengthy five-year period, and therefore differs completely from annual reports, and, indeed, reports that are submitted multiple times during the year.

The protection of Sudanese children from the repercussions of the internal conflict in Darfur and in limited parts of other regions can be divided into two periods. During the first period, violations were committed by armed movements or illegal movements; during the second period, there was a continuous and coordinated abatement of the conflict and a corresponding decrease in violations after implementation began of the Doha Peace Agreement, which was concluded in July 2011. Tijani Seissi, a well-known sponsor of that Agreement, and the former head of the Transitional Authority for Darfur and one of the most prominent nationalist and political leaders in Darfur, said that 75 per cent of the Agreement had been implemented.

With respect to the second period, we are pleased by the increasing consensus among the international community, especially within the Security Council, that the signing on 27 March 2016 of the action plan for the protection of children in conflict has paved the way for the removal of the Sudan from the list of countries where children's rights are violated in conflict, as that conflict is now ending.

We also welcome the recognition that we have received from the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for Children and Armed Conflict, Leila Zerrougui, and the Executive Director of the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF), Anthony Lake, and others, on the decisive measures that the Sudan has taken in full cooperation and coordination with the United Nations and its specialized agencies.

We have circulated an extensive and complete memorandum in English containing our notes on some of the facts included in the report of the Secretary-General that was presented to the Security Council. Here I will briefly highlight some of its most important points.

First, attached to that memorandum is a memorandum that we had circulated more than four months ago on the issue of access to conflict areas in Darfur. It leaves no doubt that this issue, which is touched on in the reports, was resolved definitively, with the exception of inevitable problems surrounding the receipt of material and technical assistance from peace partners and from the United Nations and its agencies. Such assistance includes the paving of certain roads in Jebel Marra and Northern Darfur, the lack of which makes it impossible to bring about socioeconomic development and difficult to reach affected populations and people in need. I call upon you — rather, I implore you — to carefully study this memorandum on the issue of access, so that you can fully grasp the facts.

Second, our armed forces, just like the national government forces of any other State in the world, have fought to restore law and order after armed groups used their weapons to take lives for the sake of political slogans and objectives. We do not need to state how international law and international practices view such groups, which are known as illegal groups.

Accordingly, military operations, such as Operation Decisive Summer in 2013 as well as certain military victories, have broken the determination of these armed groups, a development that occurred in the context of a negotiated peaceful solution. We must also not forget the repeated calls that the Security Council made in its relevant resolutions adopted under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations for the armed movements, all of which recruit children and push them into combat, to negotiate without further delay or preconditions.

Third, according to information available to UNICEF, the Sudanese Government has done what is required of it at the national and international levels to protect children in conflict areas. You can only imagine the shameful manner in which the armed groups impeded protection efforts in the period covered by the report.

Fourth, the United Nations now knows that regular government forces in the Sudan have never, at any level, recruited children. This is thanks to those forces' laws and traditions dating back approximately 100 years. Sudanese army forces fought in the Second World War, and, decades earlier, fought in a number of parts of Africa outside the Sudan as well as in the Middle East, operating under a set of strict military traditions and laws. During the period covered by the report of the Secretary-General, the use and recruitment of children by illegal armed movements presented challenges. We faced those challenges because the Sudanese Government, according to the Charter and international law, bears primary responsibility for preserving peace, law and order within its national borders.

We see Security Council resolution 2340 \(2017\) as a watershed between the previous state of conflict and the current state of peace in Darfur. This could not have occurred without the practical emphasis that was placed on protecting children in conflict areas through such measures as the March 2016 national plan to prevent the recruitment and use of children.

In this regard, I should like to highlight the reports of the African Union-United Nations Hybrid Operation in Darfur. There have been many such reports over the past three or four years, and they have attested to the continuous and steady improvement in security and political conditions in Darfur. I should also like to draw attention to the report that the African Union-United Nations Joint Special Representative for Darfur presented to the Council on 4 April.
